

This is purely ridiculous...Will the FCC do anything about this? I don't care if you are a Republican or Democrat -- this is a CLEAR abuse of the airwaves and the public trust as defined in the Communications Act of 1934.

The FCC fines CBS and possibly Fox for supposed indecency and, so far, has ignored what Sinclair is doing.

Granted it is somewhat of a free speech issue, but not if it is in violation of election laws.

As I said, personally I don't care if the reported documentary was pro or against either candidate. I don't like the fact that a large media owner can do this.

What if the Viacom family decided to swap out all of its programming on all of its networks, put them under the "news" guise and avoid equal time for, say, and I'm simply using Viacom as an example, a white supremacist candidate?!?

Would the FCC do anything about that?

I'm a FIRM believer in the idea of "if you don't like what we're showing, change the channel."

As long as it isn't against the law.

If the FCC is fining

stations and network
for essentially not thinking and being stupid, they should be looking into this potential abuse of
the public airwaves
rather deeply.
